

The 5-Step Method

Supporting whānau in addiction services

Published in August 2020

What is the 5-Step Method?

The 5-Step Method is an evidence-based approach for supporting whānau members affected by someone's alcohol, drug or gambling behaviour.¹

Benefits of the 5-Step Method

In many countries, the 5-Step Method supports whānau to improve their physical and social wellbeing, and enhance their coping and communication skills.²

Provided by trained addiction workers, the 5-Step Method involves . . .

- 1 Getting to know the whānau members and hearing their story
- 2 Providing relevant and accurate information
- 3 Exploring ways of coping and responding
- 4 Exploring and enhancing social support
- 5 Reviewing and arranging further help if needed

After completing the 5-Step Method . . .

8 in 10 whānau members had improved physical and psychological wellbeing, and reduced worry and distress

6 in 10 whānau members showed improvements in coping styles

Half of whānau members showed improvements in social support

(Based on NZ data collected from 58 whānau members who worked with the 5-Step Method, 2017–2020.)

For more information about the 5-Step Method in New Zealand, please visit www.tepou.co.nz

1. Copello et al (2010). <https://doi.org/10.3109/09687637.2010.515186>

2. Copello et al (2010). <https://doi.org/10.3109/09687637.2010.514234>